Egypt Suspects Libya and Iran; Vous Retaliation

CAJRO - President Hosni Mubarak of Egypi said Friday that Iran and Libya wight be responsi-ble for laying mines in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Suez and warned that Egypt would deny use of the Suez Canal to ships from any country proven to be involved.

The Egyptian defense minister,
Field Marshal Abdel Halim Abu Ghazala, said that Egypt also re-served the right to "retaliate in any other way that we think is proper."
Mr. Mubarak, Marshal Aho
Ghazala and Prime Minister Kamal Hassan Ali spoke at the Cairo airport on the president's return from a four-day visit to Yugoslavia.

Replying to questions about an article in the state-owned ocwspaper Al Ahram that accused Iran and Libya of laying the mines, Mr. Mubarak said that, although Iran denied any involvement, he thought both Tehran and Tripoli might bear responsibility.

Marshal Ahu Ghazala said Egypt was "70 percent sure" Iran and Libya were to blame for the series of explosions in which at least 13 ships were damaged in the past mooth in the Red Sea and Suez region.

"If we find somebody responsi-ble," Mr. Mubarak said, "we are going to use Article 10 of the Constantinople Convention." The 1888 convention governs navigation in the 115-year-old Suez Canal and permits Egypt to take punitive action against any country's shipping if the safety of vessels in the canal or Egyptian national security is

U.S. Bishop Rejects Politicians' Views of Morality

Bishop Malone's statement began by ooting that the U.S. Catholic Conference, the secular affairs arin of the church, "does not take positions for or against political candidates. This point needs em-phasizing lest, in the present political context, even what we say about issues be perceived as an expression of political partisanship."

Russell B. Shaw, a Catholic Conference spokesman, said that, to avoid the appearance of partisauship, Bishop Malone had intended to release the statement after the completion of both national nominating conventions but that leaks had forced an earlier release.

The Roman Catholic Church has recently taken a more assertive position on public policy issues. Last year, the conference, in a pastoral letter, condemned nuclear war and urged steps toward disarmament.

That letter and Bishop Malone's statement Thursday drew a distinc-tion between the church's stance on issues such as education, outrition, housing and health care, where, according to the statement, there is "room for sincere disagreement by Catholics and others who share our moral convictions over how moral principles should be applied to the current facts in the public policy debate," and life-and-death issues such as abortion and ouclear war.

The statement said the church's stands on issues involving the "di-rect taking of innocent human life," whether by abortion or in war, "are a direct affirmation of the constant moral teaching of the SHENYANG, China - Since Yankee traders first visited China two centuries ago, American businessmen have dreamed of the fortunes to be made by selling in the vast Chinese market, but have found it largely closed to foreigners.

Now, a few American companies Coca-Cola, Gillette, Kodak and R.J. Reynolds — are starting to manufacture and market the first foreign consumer products for general sale in this country.

"The old idea of selling hundreds of millions of Chinese just one or two boxes of matches is finally becoming possible." says Philip Hung, general manager of the Gillette company's joint venture company that makes razor hlades here. "Whether we will make the proverbial fortune selling razor blades to a couple of hundred million Chinese men, we don't know yet, but China is a huge, huge market and, at last, we are

Coca-Cola, which equipped a bottling plant in Beijing in April 1981 and later another in Guangzhou, wanted to pioneer the marketing of Western consumer products in China, but ran into problems of a different sort. A problem that still confronts companies wanting to break into the Chinese domestic market is Beijing's requirement that joint venture and similar deals export enough of their production to cover all their foreign-exchange costs, including raw materials, equipment, expatriate managers salaries and the foreign partner's profits.

"We know that many firms find this difficult," a senior official of the Chinese Council for the Promotion of International Trade said recently. "They want to sell to China and are not keen to go into competition with other operations they have elsewhere in Asia. Exceptions can be made under revised regulations, but not for con-

The third area of difficulty in most joint ventures in China is management — the clash of different managerial styles, the intractable Chinese bureaucracy, worker discipline: quality control.

"From the outset, the Shenyang and Chinese brand names and at lower prices. Liaouing provincial governments have said we should run this company the Gillette way, and they have given us strong support," Mr. Hung said. "We are results-oriented — certain results have to be achieved in the time specified - and they like this, although it has required many changes in the way of operating here."

Mr. Hung cites as an example the changes in personnel policy. In agreeing to pay local employees at least 20 percent more than they were earning before, the joint venture screened the 240 workers of the old razor-blade factory it took over from the Chinese partner and kept only 60 of them. As Hard-Core Activists Are Released. Solidarity Has Trouble Reorganizing

WARSAW — With more and more hard-core Solidarity activists being freed under the terms of a government amnesty, Poland's outawed trade union movement is finding it difficult to unify and reorganize its ranks.

For one thing, it has all but lost its rallying cry, the demand to free political prisoners. For another, Solidarity has sprouted potentially contentious branches since it was banned at the end of 1981 and its leaders were imprisoned.

August: Romans Put Out the Cat --- for Good By Don A. Schanche dogs but everyone agreed that the animals distributors go off on holiday, too, or work

Los Angeles Times Service
ROME — Huge banners blazon the message "Don't abandon him!" in the city's

They were put up by municipal authorities in a vain effort to dissuade vacationing masters of dogs and cats from abandoning their pets to the streets and squares of the city. Hundreds of thousands of dogs and im merable cats have already been left behind and the traditional August holiday season is not even two weeks old

In Padua, several dogs have been found throttled, apparently by masters too heartless to arrange for their care during the holiday. As in much of Europe, the August vacation is seen as an inalienable right of virtually the whole populace, and it is not only pets that are left behind.

A man and his sister in Milan squabbled over whose turn it was to care for their invalid 80-year-old mother. Each tried to get the police to force the other to take her. When that failed. Francesco Vaccaro, 42, put his mother into the back seat of his car, parked ber in front of his sister Rita's house and took

Police later took the bedridden and senile Maria Vaccaro to a hospital, tracked down her offspring and jailed them both.

Abandonment had tragic results at a Turin truck park. The owner had locked up for the August break and left six Alsatian guard dogs fenced in to watch the property. tals. Doctors and nurses also take part in the August vacation. A nurse in the gynecology wing of the Canicatti hospital near Agrigento, Sicily, advised women to avoid becoming pregnant nine months before the August break

"Forget it in November and December." she suggested, "and for real security, abstain from sex from mid-October to mid-January." An Englishwoman with a gynecological problem complained that she looked in vain throughout Rome for a specialist or even a general practitioner. She finally had to settle for an elderly psychiatrist who remembered enough of his medical training to prescribe antibiotics.

of civil service that the closure of bars and canteens was causing "serious discomfort to ministry workers." In Turin, so many bakeries have closed that a housewife complained to the newspaper La Stampa that she had to walk miles to find a loaf of bread. Another oewspaper reported two-hour lines at one of the few meat markets still open. While the usual tragic highway statistics reached their annual August peak - 290 deaths on Italian roads in the first week of August — the streets of the major cities are

SURGERY AFTER HIJACKING — Nafiseh Parham, a 4-month-old Iranian girl, successfully underwent heart surgery in a Rome children's hospital after she and her parents were freed by the hijackers of an Iran Air jetliner on Wednesday. The photograph lying at the top of the hospital bed, showing the Iranian leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, was put there by her parents. The parents and child were on their way to a pilgrimage in Saudi Arabia when the chartered plane was hijacked to Rome.

Amusement Parks: Are the Rides Safe?

People who go on the rides at amusement parks are playing "amusement ride roulette" with their safety, says the chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Nancy Harvey Steorts.

The commission is seeking authority from Congress to in-vestigate amusement park acci-dents after at least 12 amnsement park deaths this year, the latest on July 28 when a boy fell from a roller coaster in North Dakota Last year, the commission estimates, there were almost 10,000 injuries on rides.

The amusement park indus-

A Simple Space Question

The Soviet-American impasse about a space negotiation turns on one critical question: Should weapons be banned from space or should they merely be limited?

The Kremlin says it wants to ban space arms, starting with anti-satellite weapons. To negotiate, it wants a moratorium on ASAT testing. It offers to destroy its own primitive ASATs and to accept verification against their replacement; how adequate such verification would be, only negotiation would reveal. Congress has so far supported a negotiation and deferral of American ASAT tests to find out. The Reagan administration proposes not to prohibit but to limit ASAT deployment. It is producing a sophisticated ASAT for deployment by 1987. The first test against a target in space is planned for late fall. If successful, it could make the ASAT race irreversible.

In the discussioo so far, one word reveals this fundamental difference of approach. The United States refuses to accept the Soviet proposal that negotiations aim to "prevent" the militarization of space. It wants talks "concerning" the militarization of space.

Behind the administration's semantic shield lies a flawed policy decision. It contends that it must proceed with an anti-satellite weapon because a ban could not be reliably verified and would leave the Soviet Union with a military advantage: possession of the world's only "operational" ASAT. The Soviet lowaltitude ASAT, however, is primitive and no threat to America's most important satellites, which are in high orbit; even if secretly resuscitated during a ban, the Soviet weapon could be readily offset by defensive measures. But the evolving low-altitude American ASAT, once tested and deployed, could not easily be banned. It is launched from F-15 jet fighters, whose flights would be hard to distinguish from other F-15 flights the world over.

What really drives the American ASAT program is not the stated lear of a Soviet advantage, or even doubt about verification, but a conviction that a superior ASAT would give America an important military edge.

That is a serious miscalculation. Without a total ASAT ban, the Russians will have no great difficulty catching up or leapfrogging the American effort, ultimately threatening America's most important early warning and communications satellites. And then it will truly be too late for a verifiable ban.

The real question is whether America would be more secure in the 1990s with effective ASATs on both sides, or on neither side. A similar question was pushed aside during development of independently targeted multiple warbeads. Thus a brief American advantage was followed by Soviet MIRV deployments that are now seen as a grave disadvantage.

Congress was wise to require last year that the president seek a Soviet-U.S. ban before testing America's ASAT against a space target. The House has voted to bar such tests for another year, if Moscow also refrains. But the administration is pressing a Senate amend-ment to permit tests if the president merely certifies that he is seeking strict limitations on ASATs. Only if the House stands firm and insists on retarding flight tests can the chances for negotiating a total ban be preserved.

The Emperor Has Spoken

General Augusto Pinochet, Chile's president, does not often talk to the press. Now we know why. In an interview (IHT, Aug. 9) he compares himself to the "best Roman emperors," claiming a gift for applying military tac-tics and secrecy to political decisions. "I don't have confidence in orthodox democracy," General Pinochet asserted. "To me, what is white is white, and what is black is black." Blackly, he intends to stay in power at least until 1989, permitting no elections before then.

The general's martial philosophy has been law for II years in what was once one of Latin America's finest democracies. Initially many saw him as a savior for leading the military coup that deposed President Salvador Allende, a Marxist elected at the head of a leftist coalition including Communists. After a period of turmoil, General Pinochet brought order to street and factory and renewed economic growth. The middle classes were courted with wide-open market capitalism and the poor consoled with record levels of social spending.

Concentration camps and torture for some Chileans and the loss of democracy for all were the tolerated price. A 1980 plebiscite, even allowing for the repressive conditions of the vote, must be said to have given the general's authoritarian constitution the endorsement he sought. But the economic boom has since collapsed, and so has General Pinochet's political stature. Huge demonstrations last year for democracy brought out the police and the army with guns drawn, and still more restrictive laws. The opposition is now in retreat, but the government is isolated.

Like other Latin American nations, Chile faces a debt crisis, and the Pinochet regime is poorly positioned to demand still greater aus-terity. Military governments elsewhere are in retreat, having shattered the myth that generals are good economic managers. As in Argen-tina, Bolivia and Brazil, military rule and its patronage in Chile invited corruption, the flight of capital and economic distortions.

Despite General Pinochet's boast of the best-ever relations between Chile and the United States, the Reagan administration has been sensitive to his excesses. Its appeals for human rights have oot been as vocal or forthright as those of the Carter administration, but the Pinochet government obviously enjoys less sympathy in Washington than the democratic government of Argentina. And the attitude is colder still in Congress, which remembers Chile's refusal to extradite officials implicated in a 1976 Washington terror bombing,

Because Chile remains something of an international pariah and its government must worry about its major creditors and copper customers, Washington can still influence Emperor Pinochet's planning. Used properly, that influence might even restore his faith in "orthodox democracy." Pressing the point would at least be a fitting affirmation of our own.

Population: Argument Settled

The great debate on the relationship between population growth and socioeconomic development which ocarly broke up the Bucharest conference [10 years ago] has oow been laid to rest. It is universally recognized today that the quality of life has a direct bearing on the population growth rate of a nation and vice versa. Rapid population growth is now accepted as both a cause and an effect of poverty.

It has also been generally conceded that birth control and socioeconomie change are closely interrelated, and one cannot succeed without the other. Family planning services will be of limited use unless they are related to measures designed to provide health care, impart literacy, reduce infant and maternal mortality and improve the status of women. But the socioeconomic development of a people by itself does not cut down the population growth rate to the desired extent; it has to be accompanied by a vigorous family planning drive.

With the basic importance, benefits and underlying principles of a population program being so very evident, it is indeed intriguing why many countries have failed to lower their population growth rates.

Until Nixon Apologizes ...

Ten years after be resigned the presidency in disgrace after Watergate, [Richard Nixon] is enjoying a political resurrection. The cautious and shrewdly managed inching into the limelight is testimony to an extraordinary resilience of character which, though not proof of moral virtue, is nonetheless impressive. It poses, bowever, a problem for Americans. How is this nation, which regards itself as uniquely virtuous among the powers, to respond to a politician, undoubtedly of the first rank, who refuses to apologize for his breach of trust and who may even, in his proud and aloof way, ourse a sense of grievance?

It seems that most Americans, including many who admire Mr. Nixon's conduct of the presidency before Watergate, take the view that to understand all is not to forgive all. Perhaps they note, too, that the stable structure of hardheaded detente, which Mr. Nixon forzed, depended upon a strong presidency, which Watergate destroyed. They may, in the end, admire the statesman. But their admiration for the man will not be restored until be finds the strength of his remarkable character to apologize to them without reserve.

1909: Aeroplanes Will Be on Show PARIS - It is barely three years since M. Santos-Dumont made the first officially-controlled flight in Europe. At the end of August, 1906, the world smiled at the idea of the huge box kite being able to rise under the impulsion of a motor-driven propeller. At the end of August, 1909, the doubters expect to see aeroplanes remain aloft several hours, and the ossibilities are that during Aviation Week at Rheims their expectations will be realized. At the Rheims races the battle will be fought between the biplane and the monoplane. The biplane holds the endurance record but has ceased to be a favorite, the recent exploits of the Antoinette and Blériot machines having brought the monoplane into the front rank.

1934: Toward a Silver-Backed Dollar WASHINGTON - Nationalization of silver [on Aug. 9] as the first step in bringing the metallic backing of the currency to a basis of 25 per cent silver and 75 per cent gold was regarded by most observers here as foreshadowing an international monetary conference to discuss the possibility of bringing silver into the currency systems of all the leading commercial nations. It is pointed out that part of the President's long-range monetary policies is some move for internationalization and stabilization of silver which would make trading with the Far East easier, particularly where gold countries are concerned. With the United States taking the lead, it is felt that other commercial nations will follow suit.

Taxes and Arms: Prime Issues for the Campaign

N EW YORK — President Reagan and the Democratic presidential candidate, Walter Mondale, have established the first subject for their campaign debates, which the White House must know cannot be avoided. But they have not gone beyond setting the topic. So far, their ex-change on whether there will have to be a tax rise after elections has had a through-the-looking-glass unreality. "You will!" "I won't!" They both know that is not the choice. They both acknowledge that the deficit has to be reduced, and that the only way is to increase government revenues and cut government spending. Incredibly, the biggest economy in the world is getting into the debtor situation of a developing country. As anybody trying to buy a house

Mr. Reagan says that recovery will generate enough tax money to reverse the burgeoning debt without slashing vital needs, if Congress agrees to pare away fat. The one thing economists agree on now is that their crystal balls are cloudy, but they don't even venture the hope that such a buge boom as Mr. Reagan's scenario would require could be achieved without another bust, Wall Street takes this matter seriously. It spurted upward with the news that growth was By Flora Lewis slowing down, because that improves the chance that growth can be sustained.

Mr. Mondale says that more money will have to be raised but that be will not put the burden on the middle classes and the poor. Soak-the-rich by itself would not be enough either, and frighten-ing business out of domestic investment with too much tax would send unemployment back up.

This means there will also have to be ceilings on big spending. The mounting debt service cannot be lowered without dropping the deficit. Mr. Reagan has already chopped at social services, but his cuts have not begun to deliver the budget balance that he promised. On the contrary. What more has he in mind? Social Securities ty? Education? Farm subsidies? Definitely not nilitary spending, he says; that must keep rising. Mr. Mondale has been brave about taxes, which are never music to a voter's ear. But he has been coy about spending. He, too, would have to propose cuts. He has probably read the elector-ate's mood correctly in promising not to weaken defense. But Mr. Reagan's record shows that vast military spending means vast debt, whether with more growth and lower taxes or, as Mr. Mondale aggests, more taxes and slower growth.

The lesson of the Vietnam War is often cited in terms of military adventure, but there was another, in terms of economic adventure. The stimulusof military spending is an illusion. It may prime the pump for a while, but it depletes the well. The cost is eventually extracted by printing money (inflation) or constricting it (recession).

The defense issue has been aggravated by the foolish idea that security is measured in dollars. President Johnson made the mistake of thinking that seeing problems could be solved by "throw." that social problems could be solved by "throw-ing money" at them. It is as much of a mistake to think that "throwing money" buys strength. Despite denials, there is strong evidence that American combat readiness has deteriorated. Richard Halloran of The New York Times (IHT, July 23) has rooted out studies to show that America has bought a lot more weapons but not the capacity to use them. Since 1981 the administration has had authority to spend $888.8 billion on defense, but the Joint Chiefs, senior field commanders, officers down the line and House investigators say that current deficiencies could leave the forces unable to fight a major enemy.

Taxes and the deficit cannot be addressed without questioning the defense budget. And the real security issue cannot be judged without a close look at where the military's money goes. Senators Gary Hart and Sam Nunn and Representations Leaven and Albert Core Leaven sentatives Les Aspin and Albert Gore Ir., all outspoken in criticism of the nation's military machine and defense policy, have some good ideas on the subject and should be listened to.

The way money is being spent for America's defense should be the subject of the second debate; then other subjects should follow. If the candidates are made to explain facts, this should be an enlightening campaign.

Once Upon a Time, Democrats Had a World Vision

By Charles William Maynes

WASHINGTON — Charles de Gaulle once wrote that France could not be France without gran-deur. Reading recent party platforms, and particularly the Democratic platform endorsed in San Francisco, one wonders if America can be America with only a laundry list. For de Gaulle, grandeur was to be found by asserting a special French place in the world. If France failed to assert that presence, de Gaulle feared that France would become simply a large Liechtenstein. America may need a de Gaulle, for at this point both parties fail to provide it vision. Ronald Reagan promotes nostal-gia instead. The only president in postwar history to seek re-election without any significant foreign policy successes, he would seem uniquely vulnerable to challenge.

The criticism is likely to be that the president has brought America closer to ouclear war, that his proposals for ballistic-missile defense -- the socalled star wars program — will cost hundreds of billions and leave the nation no more secure, that he has moved too close to South Africa and not close enough to Israel, even that be has overlooked the Irish problem.

There are powerful constituencies in America ready individually to appland each one of these charges. But is there any theme that brings all of these groups together as Americans? In the past the Democratic Party

There is the tricky part. The Soviets know perfectly well what is going on, but that does not mean they will accept indefinitely Pakistan's ritual demals. This is all the more so if the United States not only increases its aid but boasts about it. We are talking then, about the need for a certain subtlety. And yet, there it was in The Wall Street Journal last week: "House Panel Votes to Give Afghan Rebels $50 Million in Coyert Help, Sources Say."

The story under the headline said that the House Appropriations Committee had "secretly attached $50 million for covert aid to Afghan rebels," according to "intelligence sources." Confirming the report, The Washington Post credited "congres. sional sources." By nightfall the story was all over the television news. Not the least of the questions this.

raises is whether America, having reached a certain maturity in the early postwar years about the way to handle this sort of thing, has been reduced to a second childhood by the torrid revelations of congressional in-vestigations of the CIA in 1975. The word "covert" means, well, covert —if you're going to do it at all. Yet we read in the Democratic Party platform a promise to support the efforts of the Afghanistan freedom in the figure with "material assistance." Those trigger words come straight, from a heavily co-sponsored resolution now before Congress. It was introduced in 1982 by Senator Paul Tsongas, the Massachusetts Demo-crat. Now the senator is apparently having second thoughts about how hard to press it. The U.S. effort in Afghanistan is considerably bigger today and the sensitivities of the Pa kistanis have become a good dealmore acute. But, having signed on, a lot of co-sponsors are uncomfortable with the idea of signing off on their devotion to freedom lighters.

You could argue that none of this matters when you consider how much of the so-called covert program has intellectual inhabitant of the White found its way into the news. It is also hard to believe that these suspected CIA leaks are unrelated to a tendency in the Reagan administration to flaunt its antirecognizable need among its more that the pronounced ideologues for the psychic income, so to speak, that comes from the whole world knowing.

Whatever the motive, the effect is the same. The State Department insists that the administration fully supports delicate United Nations efforts in concert with Pakistan to negotiate a Soviet withdrawal and ingotiate a Soviet withdrawai and the stallation of a nonaligned governtration's sincerity. That still leaves the mujehidin, Pakistan and U.S. policy at the mercy of a leaky U.S. intelligence community, "congressio-nal sources" with no great care for classified information and politicians who cannot afford not to piedge their. allegiance to Afghan freedom uguners once the issue is out in the open.

The Kinetic Conceptions of Pol Bury

By John G. H. Oakes PERDREAUVILLE France —
Calling artist Pol Bury "taciturn" is like calling water wet. The Belgian sculptor is not a man of superlatives. Here, an hour or so outside Paris, in the farmhouse that Bury and his American wife have converted into an atelier. he seems at ease, content to let a visitor wander about and experience his work. The house and grounds are hamted by the barely perceptible sounds of clicking, twitching mechanical sculptures. The parquetry of a wooden table sighs and breathes gently, bronze cubes and balls move mysteriously on their board. A pair of old shoes -empty make the motions of walking.

Hailed as the inheritor of the Calder tradition, Bury, 62, has set today's standard for the definition of kinetic - moving or movable aft, "My work is formal," Bury said, meaning that he is concerned with forms. "It is oot symbolic," But this is abstraction with a human face — the face may be the viewer's, staring back in the highly polished metallic surfaces of one of Bury's sculptures. "I want to give back the image, but changed," he said. "I want the viewer to see his own image transformed. "It's the same old problem of art," he continued, explaining his current interest in reflective surfaces. "I am trying to give a new angle, to see things in a new way."

The language of shifting perspectives - art in motion - has been important to him throughout his

As a young painter, Bury allied himself with the Surrealists. In 1950, after a few years as a partici-pant in the COBRA (for Copenha-gen, Brussels and Amsterdam) group — the postwar revitalization of Surrealism to which such artists as Pierre Alechinsky, Karel Appel and Asger Jorn belonged — Bury saw a Calder exhibit at the Galerie Maeght and became an instant convert to kinetic art. He brought to it his spontaneity and wry hu-mor, both of which had been our-

... tured by Surrealism. From the early 1950s, he experimented with various forms of movement io art, crossing the boundary between sculpture and painting with his "Mobile Planes," his first works of kinetic art. One colored shape was laid on another, on a single axis, permitting a spectator to rearrange the work.

Combining a Surrealist's fasci-nation with the strangeness of evcryday life and his newfound passion for movement, be experimented with "distortions," photographic representations of fa-miliar objects — New York's Gug-genheim Museum, the Statue of Liberty, the Eiffel Tower, or human faces, rearranged and twisted. Soon Bury was incorporating small motors in his works. It was in this period, the early 1960s, that he gave up painting, moved to France and concentrated on sculpting. For Bury, painting after Yves Klein is "superfluous."

"Since we arrived at monochrome painting. I believe we can't go much further," he said. (He doesn't mind talking generalities, although talking about his own work seems to pain him.) Even be-fore Klein, he said, the end was in sight for painting "Art changed totally with the advent of photography. Before photography, painting had to tell a story. Now, it's just

It is an exhibition that is unlikely to be seen in a museum. Evidence the contrast between the creativity of this is provided by a comparison with a retrospective beld in Düsseldorf at the Kunstmuseum in 1981-82, which later traveled to Hannover. A glance at the monograph written by the West German spe-cialist Helmut Ricke, "Schoeider mative entries, whose purpose France — Glas des Arts Déco" published by Verlag Kunst und Aotionitäten in Hannover to serve as a guide to his Düsseldorf exhibition, is enough to show how different the thrust is in the two shows. In West Germany the emphasis was on big pieces and on the more accomplished creations. Some of these are also to be seen at the Louvre. They show that Schneider, at the peak of his form, produced in the late 1920s and early 1930s some strikingly modern glass vessels that in boldness of shape and abstract decoration look advanced even today. Extraordinary Drawings of Watteau on Show in Washington

By John Russell
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Something extraordinary in the way of an exhibition of paintings and drawings can be seen at the National Gallery in Washington. It includes a figure of Pierrot that is one of the most poignant studies of alienation to be found in all European painting. It also includes a direct and unsentimental evocation of what it feels like to be a wounded soldier who has been left behind after a battle, and some investigations of beggary that can rank with Remhrandt. It ends with a former shop sign that has come to be regarded as one of the most beautiful pictures that ever was painted. The author of these works, and of everything else in the show, is Antoine Watteau (1684-1721), who for many people is a painter of dainty little pictures, all silks and satios and stylized flirtations, that belong to an age long vanished and not always regretted.

And, of course, it is perfectly true that Watteau originated what looks at first glance to be a world of artificial comedy in which no dress is ever worn twice and all couples pair off happily. If the action takes place in the open air, as it often does, mosquitoes will oever have been heard of and the grass be-neath the lovers is always sweet, and soft, and dry. There are paintings like this in the exhibit, and very seductive many of them are.

But the case of Watteau is like the case of his near-contemporary Marivaux. What looks to be merely elegant turns out to touch on every note in the gamnt of human feeling and to make them all sing ont in time. Watteau was as sensitive to the tongue-tied lover, whom not even Cupid himself could bring to the point of declaration, as he was to the coarseness, the failures of judgment and the lumbering deceptions for which oo amount of superfine tailoring can make up.

It is also important to know that Wattean had seen at first hand what it was to be bundled off to the wars as an apprentice soldier. He had also seen at first hand what it was like to have nothing to eat, to have your savings reduced to noth-ing by a scoundrel, and to come back minus a leg from one of the most ghastly of recorded battles. He had seen men walk in terror of plague, and seen others reduced by famine to cannibalism. A great Watteau exhibition must also suggest that Watteau was a Parisian by adoption. In fact he got to Paris when he was 16 and lived there for much of the rest of his life. He arrived at the time when Parisian taste was displacing the taste of Versailles and the Parisian theater was a world in full ebullition with new forms, new faces, new stock characters, new rules and regnlations and a new impact upon intelligent young people. When he came to choose the paintings for the show, Rosenberg went about it in a way that will fascinate those who know something of Watteau already but may disconcert the layman. Naturally he included masterpieces, both large and small, like the "Enseigne de Gersaint" (a shōp sign that once hung above a dealer's shop on the Pont de Notre Dame in Paris), the "Shepherds"; the "Prelude to a Concert," the "Peaceful Love" and the celebrated "Embarkatioo" from Berlin, the "Pierrot," also called "Gilles," the "Diana at her Bath" and half a dozen others from Paris, the "Mezzetin" from the Metropolitan Museum, the lately acquired "Happy Age, Golded Age" from Fort Worth and the "Pleasures of the Dance" from Dulwich in London.

The less happy result of Rosen-berg's wide-minded and specula-tive policy is that Watteau the ter may seem to the layman to have had a great many ups and downs. An exhibition that has been devised in part as a proving ground for contested cases is a different thing from an exhibition that is devised to give unblemished de-light. (Rosenberg does not hesitate to say that be dislikes at least one of the paintings that are on view.)

Thompson Captures 2d Decathlon Gold

By Robert Fachet

FIELD HOCKEY

> LOS ANGELES - Daley Thompson missed the world record in the decathlon by one point Thursday night but won his second straight Olympic gold medal in the event with 8,797 points. In one of those twists of figures that make track and field incomprehensible to the common man, Thompson will become the world record holder off this performance on April 1, when revised tables for the decathlon go into effect.

Thompson, representing Britain, did not much care about the record. "I was never coming for the world record," he said. "All I wanted to do was to win. The world record wasn't so important here." Valerie Brisco-Hooks of the United States got her second gold medal of these Games by winning the 200 meters in the Olympic record time of 21.81. She became the first athlete in Olympic history man or woman - to win both the 200 and 400 meters. On Saturday she will try to win a third gold, in the 4x400 relay.

In Thursday night's only other In Thursday night's only other varion level rose to what it used to final, Anisoara Stancin of Romania be when I started," he said. "The won the women's long jump at 22 motivation was missing in the last won the women's long jump at 22 feet 10 inches (6.96 meters). In Archery, Unranked Competitor From Indonesia Hits the Bull's Eye

LOS ANGELES - In 1957, O.K. Smathers paid his way to the world archery championships in Prague because he failed to make the U.S. team. Then he made the trip worth the overseas investment: He won the world title.

In 1983, Belgium's Marnix Vervinck finished eight points behind
Darrell Pace and Rick McKinney of the United States to place third in the world championships though he had oever shot among the world's best before.

It happens at every major tournament: An unknown blossoms into a contender. And the 1984 Olympic archery tournament is oo different. The man who has stirred the emotions of the experts is Indonesia's Suradi Rukimin, who is in sixth place after the first of two FITA (International Archery Federation) rounds were completed Thursday.

He is only eight points from third place Hiroshi Yamamoto of Japan. Rukimin, 25, an architecture student, bails from Ujung Pandang on the island of South Sulawesi. He had the advantage of living ocar the island's only archery field where his brother-in-law was coaching. But be had never met an international field before the start of Wednesday's Olympic competition.

"I had oever even heard of him," said Pace, the two-day leader.
"Guys come out of oowhere in this kind of competition."

"This is very important for our national association for me to shoot at a high level" said Rukimin, whose best is a respectable 2,465. "I'm oot nervous at all about competing against Pace and McKinney. I knew who they were before 1 came, bot I worry about the target, not the competition."

But even Indonesia's coach, Edward Rahantoknam, is surprised by his archer's performance. Rukimin's highest placing at a major tournament was fourth at the Asian Games last year.

"Because this is a big competition, there is a mental situation," Rahantoknam said. "This is why I think it is surprising that he is doing so well. But he has the talent."
Said U.S. Coach John Williams: "Because archery is an individual sport there's always room for someone to pop up. But I don't think anyone is going to catch Darrell and Rick. I came in thinking they would run away from everybody and they are."

For Some Athletes, An Olympic Gold Can Be Worth Millions

By Robert Lindsey New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - As Ernesto Canto of Mexico strode around the track of the Los Angeles Memorial Coliscum last week, a commanding lead in the 20-kilometer walk assur-ing him of an Olympic gold medal, thousands of his countrymen thunderously cheered him on, "Viva

But a handful of people in the Conseum did not cheer. They only stared at his shoes.

Shortly before the Games began, Canto had stopped wearing Nike athletic shoes, made in the United States, and had switched to shoes made by Adidas Co. of West Ger-many. Now, in his moment of triumph, he was suddenly worth a lot more to Adidas. It was a victory in the Olympic-shoe wars that would never be commemorated with a victory ceremony.

At the Los Angeles Games, much of the gold at stake is not being worn around the necks of the victors. Star athletes are vying for exposure and fame that will reward them with lucrative contracts to endorse athletic shoes, clothing and other merchandise. They seek the kind of fame that will enable them to serve as spokesmen for consumer products, and even earn them

For most of them, the gold rush begins after the Games, but for some, prospecting began long ago. Lewis is generally believed to have one of the most lucrative shoe endorsement contracts, but his manager, Joe Douglas, says he is trying to use the Olympics to broaden his celebrity status beyond those who buy shoes.

No athlete has done more preparation and planning to exploit his Olympic fame this year than Lewis, who is seeking to repeat the achievement of Jesse Owens at the 1936 Olympics by winning gold medals in the I00-and 200-meter dashes, the long jump and the 400meter relay.

But while preparing for the effort to capitalize on his Olympic fame, Lewis has been the target of criticism from some quarters for purportedly unseemingly behavior by an amateur athlete.

Douglas, for example, has been accused by some newspaper reporters and editors of trying to manipulate news about Lewis and to isolate him from the general press while he and Lewis have offered interviews to broadcasters and select publications.

Criticism from some other athletes and others here that Lewis is using his quest for four gold medals for personal and financial gain, oot to demonstrate excellence in sport, surfaced this week when Lewis won the long-jump competition with a leap of 28 feet 1/4 inch (8.54 meters).

As a capacity crowd waited for him to attempt to beat Bob Beamon's 16-year-old world record of 29-21. Lewis tried one more jump, fouled, and then passed the rest of his attempts, provoking boos from many in the Coliseum. Later, Lewis refused to talk to reporters, as is customary at the Olympics.

At his only news conference held since he began his quest for four gold medals. Lewis seemed to try hard to stress that he was above such mercenary considerations. "I

Despite Trade Deficit, U.S. Retains Ability to Compete

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Has the United States lost its ability to with the U.S. trade deficit having ballooned to an annual rate of $103.8 billion during the first half of this year, far above last year's record total of $61.1 billion, worries persist that the sudden surge of optimism on Wall Street is ignoring the persistent troubles of the real economy.

But a new study by the New York Stock Exchange, directed by its chief economist, William C. Freund, contends that the U.S. trade position is much stronger than is generally believed and trade position is much stronger than is generally believed and that the merchandise-trade deficit, which has been growing for the past 11 years, is not an adequate measure of the nation's performance in international

For one thing, the balance of trade, relating exports to imports, does not directly address the level or rate of in-crease in exports. For instance, between 1964 and 1970, when the United States ran a trade surplus, its exports rose at an annual rate of 4.9 percent. But between 1976 and 1982, when the United States ran deficits, its exports rose 5.8 percent a year. The deficits were caused by a still laster rise in imports. But a rise in U.S. imports reflects many things other than the industrial proficiency of the nation, especially the rising value of the dollar and the greater rate of growth of the U.S. economy than that of its trading partners. Faster growth here draws improved from abroad and creates a bigger home market for many imports from abroad and creates a bigger home market for many products, while slower growth abroad, combined with the rising dollar stemming from higher interest rates, restrains U.S. exports.

Further, if petroleum exports and imports are excluded, the .United States ran a nonpetroleum trade surplus every year from 1973 through 1982. In 1983, with the balance of merchandise trade showing a total deficit of $60.6 billion, petroleum imports were $58.6 billion and the nonpetroleum trade deficit was only $2

Although a few American industries lost ground — notably, steel, autos, textiles and shoes — the study finds that nearly half of 40 United States industry groups had a larger share of world exports in 1982 than in 1972. It says that 23 groups had the largest or second-largest share of world exports in 1982 against 22 in 1973 and invested to a cheer of the U.S. medical states and the states of the states o 1972, and imports fell as a share of the U.S. market in 12 groups, with the increase in import penetration 3 percentage points or less in an additional 15 of the 40 groups.

ob losses resulting from foreign-trade factors, the study concludes, have been exaggerated. Fourteen industry groups gained 525,000 jobs as a result of foreign trade. Twenty-six groups lost 1.1 million jobs, but 650,000 of the job losses were concentrated in four industries: apparel; shoes and leather; iron and steel, and motor vehicles. Eliminating those four groups, U.S.

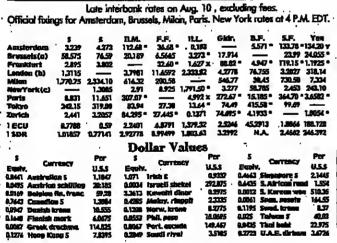

is "smokestack America" dying? Definitely not, the stock-exchange study concludes, especially in terms of employment. To be sure, shifts from goods to services are going on. The goods-producing sector provided 46 percent of all jobs and 57 percent of output in 1982, compared with 50 percent and 60 percent, recognizably in 1972, and 57 percent and 63 percent in 1962. respectively, in 1972, and 57 percent and 63 percent in 1962.

But this relative decline of the goods industries appears to be no cause for concern. Rather, the shift from primary production (agriculture and mining) to secondary production (manufacturing), and then from secondary to tertiary (services) was explained and predicted half a century ago by Colin Clark, the Australian primary and secondary production continues? Using an interin-dustry model developed by Clopper Almon at the University of Maryland, the study finds that growth should be sufficient to meet job needs and bring down the unemployment rate by 1995. If total real economic output can match the 1952-1972 growth

Price Decline Sets Back Recovery Of the U.S. Aluminum Industry

By Daniel F. Cuff

NEW YORK - A potent recovery by the U.S. m industry has been checked this summer by an unexpected fall in prices. The industry regained its feet in 1983 after its worst recession — several years of decreasing consumption and heavy losses — and began 1984 with wall Street analysts urged investors to buy the stocks of major aluminum companies and predicted heady results in a recovering economy. And the major companies did report strong first-half gains.

But the price of aluminum ingol began to weaken. According to J. Clarence Morrison, metals

U.S. Rules Out Foreign Bearer Bonds

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Treasury Department has given "definitive" assurance that the administration has no plans to issue bearer bonds m overseas money markets, according to the Senate Finance Committee chairman, Robert Dole.

Bearer bonds are government securities that are not registered in the name of the holder. The Treasury had been considering issuing them only outside the United States in the expectation of drawing in more foreign capital.

It was pointed out that since they would be unregistered, they could fall into the hands of Americans who could use them to evade taxes.

will be no issuance of bearer securities," Mr. Dole said on the Senate floor Thursday. Senator Howard M. Metzenbaum, Democrat of Ohio, raised the issue of bearer bonds during debate on an agriculture bill. He wanted to attach an amendment to the legislation expressing that the sense of the Senate was against issuing bearer

[The Senate approved a resolution Friday urging that all U.S. government-backed securities be issued in registered form and not issued payable to the bearer, Reuters reported from Washington. The measure, passed on voice vote, is nonbinding.] In a letter to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan last month, Mr. Dole expressed concern at a perceived collusion by the U.S. Treasury with tax evaders," if such bonds were issued.

No. 5 in a Series First of Many Big Rallies

The All Invest pools which are managed by specialists comprising the Performance Group have just flattened a round of call option positions which genarated gains of 300 and 400 percent during the latest markel rolly. We expect, however, to be able to accomplish such extensive escalation of equity several more times before the new bull market's second leg has run its course. Short-sighted market players—and too many pnalysis-seem to conclude that every dip is the beginning of a crash and every rally puts the market at a new top. The truth is that bull market legs proceed in the manner of D field of horses running o steeplechase. Mounts which complete the first jump effectively are able to overcome numbers of additional obstacles and troos before the end of the run-which in this case we feel will not be seen until early 1986. The hybrids in resources and technologies—such as Schlumberger—and "pure plays" such as Advanced Micro Devices are growth vehicles whose next eruptions we'll be covering in our next report to clients. Contact us or return the coupon for complimentary cov erage.

Aluminum Recovery Slows

capital spending takes off interest rates case and falling oil prices stimulate world economies. only about 25 percent of the busioess of domestic aluminum companies. Mr. Morrison said. The rest is in fabricated products such as sheet, plate, foil and piping. The major concern, said Nicholas C. Toufexis, an analyst at Op-penheimer & Co., is whether the weakness in ingot will "translate to the fabricated products."

Prices for these products have remained strong, Mr. Morrison said, up 22 percent from last year's levels. But in the last few mooths weakness has developed in common alloy grade, used in siding for houses and low-grade foil. In addition, Miss Jennings said that in July "we saw the first really significant price reductions, in sheet products in particular." se fabricated products, she said, have come ooder "intense import pressure," especially from Japan. With the dollar's strength, it has made the U.S. a very attractive market. This is a relatively ocw factor." Mr. Toufexis agreed that imports were a growing problem for U.S. producers even though there has At any rate, ingol represents saly about 25 percent of the business of domestic aluminum companies, Mr. Morrison said. The rest is don and New York. There was on the rest in general information on pricing, and customers faced uncertainties about possible shortages. The aluminum industry is also international in nature. It seeks out global areas where electric power is the cheapest, because the electrolytic process by which aluminum is refined requires abundant energy. It also draws its ores from throughout the world.

Aluminum productioo has escaped the larger excesses of the Third World nations that produce and flood metal markets without regard to economic cycles. Brazil has aluminum operations, as does Ghana, but Ghana's hydroelectric facilities are currently shut down by drought. Kaiser Aluminom owns 90 percent of the Ghana operacion. The remaining 10 percent is owned by Reynolds Metals.

trend of 3.5 percent a year, the growth in jobs will be enough to bring the unemployment rate down to 4.5 percent by 1995, three points below where it is today. The reason: a slowdown to the growth of the labor force.

The study contends that fears of unprecedented shifts to services and fears that the new jobs will be concentrated in lower-paying occu-pations are unwarranted. In 1995, according to the Maryland model, the top five occupations, in terms of oumbers, will be: 5,387,000 teachers, up 23.9 percent from 1982; 3,936,000 sales clerks, up 30.1 percent; 3,876,000 custodians. up 33.5 percent; 2,031,000 farmers and farm workers, down 27 per-cent, and 3,520,000 doctors, ourses and other health workers, up 41.2 percent from 1982.

Some jobs will have faster percentage growth up to 1995. The fastesi growers will be cashiers, up 56.7 percent to 2,546,000.

T fear that Fyodor Ahramov's novel "Two Winters and Three Summers," published in the Soviet Union in 1968, is appearing in English translation at a particularly insuspicious moment. On the other hand, perhaps now is just when we need it. As relations between the superpowers freeze, our views of each other decrease in complexity, and much of history becomes a distracting detail. Americans are often told that the Soviet Union is a country where critical expression is officially outlawed and socially taboo, and rarely reminded that the boundaries of acceptable discourse have shifted back and forth, to The year of Stalin's death, 1953, should be a more familiar signpost. Abramov's literary career illustrates its significance: in early 1954, while teaching Soviet literature at Leningrad state university, this 34-year-old party member published an incisive and scathing critique of those Soviet novels which pret-tied up rural life. Born to peasants in the Arkhanprovince northeast of Leningrad, Abramov must have known for years about the gap between the poverty of the village and the pastoral idylls of Stalinist fiction. Now he could write about it in the journal Novy Mir. He called for literature to he faithful to postwar reality - a reality which included lack of manpower, hunger and drought, and the slowness of peasants to change their thoughts and actions. Only truthful works of fiction could aid in the building of socialism, he wrote, accepting that role for literature and that goal for his nation. (The

Solution to Last Week's Puzzle

What is strange and fascinating about "Two Win-ters and Three Summers" is precisely this mixture of conventionality and daring. The main character, Mikhail Pryaslin, looks at first like a typical positive hero — in his teens, he is already responsible, hardworking, and capable of filling the place of his father who did not return from World War II. But his passage to maturity also involves growing tolerance for the reviled outcasts of Stalinist society; an ex-POW and an Old Believer, whose religion dates back to the 17th-century schism in the Russian Orthodox Church. They are good oeighbors, trusted workers, and decent family men — and that morality in everyday life is what Mikhail, and presumably Abramov, values most. Such a live-and-let-live atti--tude contains an implicit rejection of repression as cruel, ineffective and also self-destructive of Soviet society. "You can't teach people through evil, lads. You never do evil to others, but only to yourself," teaches the saintly Old Believer, Egorsha, a child-hood friend, forfeits Mikhail's love by becoming a dogmatic, materialistic careerist, quick to condemn others; yet it is he, rather than Mikhail, who wins praise in a Soviet newspaper, in an article consisting largely of fabricated facts.

Abramov's style, which recalls the early Solzhenitsyn, may be characteristic of a former, more liberal period in Soviet history, but his books have been reprinted in recent years and reportedly are still popular among Russian readers. At the very least, a book like this can appear a solution of the standard of the st book like this can provide a safety valve for disap-pointment and frustration, but it may also keep the spirit of de-Stalinization alive within mainstream Soviet society. So the fruits of earlier thaws may provide the seeds for the next.

Testing Executives' Competence

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service

TEW YORK — Intelligence as measured by IQ tests may be related to success in school but it has surprisingly little to do with career achievement, according to a growing number of psycholo-

Their research has repeatedly shown that, although the best executives do at least moderately well oo lQ tests, that ranking is oot the factor that distinguishes the ones who advance from the ones who do oot.

And yet successful career peo-ple presumably do a lot of thinking on their way to the top and after they get there.

This seeming paradox has impelled some psychologists to abandon the kind of intelligence that 10 tests measure and search for something else. Some describe it as a measure of "practical intelligence." As the findings roll in, the psychologists suggest they may finally be on in an understanding of mental processes that are critical in the world of work. Often, practical intelligence can be characterized as one's style or innate approach to problems, a subtle combination of thinking and behavior.

Recent research, for instance, suggests that the most successful executives think in a style that is cognitively complex, according to Siegfried Streufert of the Pennsylvania State University College of Cognitive thinking does not de-pend on IQ. Instead, it involves a combination of both intelligence and judgment.

The hallmarks of cognitive thinking, according to Streufert, include the ability to plan strategically without being rigidly locked into one course, the capacity to acquire information for decisionmaking without being overwhelmed, and being able to grasp relationships between rapidly changing events.

Unfortunately, executives who do not think that way are common, according to Streufert. They see problems individually and of-

however, have the mental capacity, the temperament and the inchnation to confront complexities even in small problems. They tend to plan long ioto the future, taking into account all possible events that can be anticipated, as well as the consequences of those events," Streufert wrote in Across the Board, a publication for exec-

Streufert assessed thinking styles in a simulated situation where executives spent several hours making decisions for a fictitious company based on such data as investments abroad, raw materials and the stability of foreign governments.

The best executives were better able to make connections between decisions and nrchestrated an entire sequence of decisions toward a single crucial one. Such an executive, says Streufert, considers longterm consequences and sees multiple connections.

"Multidimensional thinking does not make much difference for success at low or mid-level jobs," Streufert said, "but at the highest management levels it correlates with salary and position. It's particularly important in companies which operate in an environment where there is great un-certaioty, and where ao executive's every decisinn can make all the difference."

That research illustrates one nf the central points made by Ulric Neisser, a psychologist at Emory University whose arguments against overemphasizing academic intelligence have influenced many people taking the new approach. "There are many ways for people to be smart," he said. "The ones IO tests measure are just a few out of bundreds." In Neisser's view, the items on IQ tests are artificial and have little to do with a person's actual experience. What's more, he said, they are unlike most of the real problems people face because the information needed to solve them is available, they are well-defined gist at Harvard University, was one of the first to argue that it makes more sense to test for competence than for intelligence.

McClellaod, writing io the American Psychologist, criticized the practice of screening job ap-plicants with general intelligence tests that call on them to make analogies or correctly define words "There are almost on occupations or life situations that require a person to do word analoes or choose the most correct of four alternative meanings of a word," McClelland wrote.

He proposed, instead, that psychologists measure the actual competencies that make for success in a given job or career. One of the first efforts to do so was by McClelland and a group of col-leagues at McBer, a Boston consulting firm.

In their approach, people who excel at a job are asked to describe key incidents they handled particularly well and several they han-dled poorly. The McBer psychologists then analyze the descriptions tn find the underlying competencies that seem to make for outstanding performance.

In his book "The Competent Manager" Richard Boyatzis, a colleague of McClelland, identi-fies 19 competencies be found in a study of more than 2,000 managers. Among them are being able to get different groups to collaborate well, being able to spot hidden patterns in an array of facts, and a sense of spootancity in expres-

These skills are not simply learned on the job. They involve a network of cognitive, emotional and motivational tendencies. For example, Boyatzis found that the best managers were high in the need for power, seeing themselves as important and have ing a need to persuade and influence others regardless of the issue.

It is key competencies such as this that Richard Wagner and Robert Sternberg call practical intelligence. In an article to appear later this year in The Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, they describe results from studies of practical intelligence they bave made among different professional groups.

Most of a persoo's practical intelligence, they contend, is tacit. Unlike classroom learning, it is not directly spoken about or taught. Such tacit knowledge is often piecemeal, hard to articulate and therefore relatively difficult to pass on.

Thus, according to George Klemp Jr., a psychologist who assesses job competencies at McBer. it is not enough to ask people what it takes to do a job well, since their ideas about excellence often miss the subtleties involved.

Klemp gives the example of a competence assessment of sales-people McBer did for a large retailer. Most salespeople, on being asked to name the characteristics of "supersalesmen," placed ag-gressiveness high on the list. "Our study found, however, that top sales professionals don't hustle people, Klemp said. "The less effective salespeople, by contrast, tend to hustle people — all tential customers, regardless of the customers' level of interest." Because practical intelligence is tacit, Klemp said, "even the best resumed their kayak voyage to trace the roots of civilization in Greenland. The expedition leader, a Danish architect, John Andersen, 40, and his companion, Greenlander hunter Boas Madsen, 32, set out in early July, exploring the remains of 500-year-old settlements and cating walrus meat to survive in the first stage of the 800-mile (1,300kilometer) voyage. But a herd of about 100 caraged walrases and 40knot winds drove the men 50 nautical miles out to sea, where pack ice threatened to crush their delicate, specially designed kayak. They were forced to radio for help and were rescued by helicopter on July 27. The rescue cost nearly 200,000 Danish kroner (about $20,000), and although the voyagers were ready to leave two days later, they were required to stay two weeks at the Danmarkshavn weather station outpost awaiting funds to cover the costs of rescue insurance. In the first stage, they discovered three unrecorded Eskimo settlements from the 15th century, including a find in Andrup Land, the northernmost Eskimo ruin ever discovered in eastern Greenland.
